

Corena Wiggins is a College Advisor with over 15 years of experience in higher and secondary education assisting thousands of students in navigating the college admissions process.

She worked with Broward County Public Schools for six years and won “College Summit School of the Year,” (now known as Peer Forward) for cultivating and maintaining a college-going culture. She continued to cultivate her in-depth experience with highly selective college admissions to assist students within the New York City charter school industry in pursuit of top tier universities. Corena has created and taught rigorous college readiness curriculum to high school students and has also designed and facilitated virtual interactive trainings for new and returning educators on the fundamentals of college advising and industry best practices.

She currently serves as a board member on the Young Professional Advisory Board in the City of Lauderdale and is also a weekly contributor on “The Culture” hosted by Faraji Muhammad on the Black Star Network curated by journalist Roland S. Martin.

With the right balance of empathy and pragmatism, Corena has guided her students through some of the most stressful and sensitive financial undertakings imaginable. She encourages her students to make informed decisions for themselves while helping them to understand complicated or frustrating concepts and exercising her love of advocacy on their behalf.
